Learning Facilitator Central Registry

Learning Facilitators are the guides who lead early childhood teachers and adults working with children through the 12 Mind in the Making Modules. Learning Facilitators must have experienced the Modules first as participants and received special preparation on how to facilitate the Modules, sponsored by Families and Work Institute (FWI) and a designated Lead Agency.

It is important to note that before becoming a Learning Facilitator, all individuals must have firsthand experience in each Module - first as a participant - and then, as a Facilitator of the content. Facilitators will be observed by FWI or the Lead Agency in the community either through on-site observations or by video. Facilitators will be provided support by the Lead Agency in order to maximize their facilitation skills as well as to secure the facilitation quality and accuracy of the Facilitator.

Upon successful completion of participating in and then facilitating the Modules, Learning Facilitators are then entered into FWI's national registry and authorized to share the Modules with early childhood teachers in center and home-based programs. Some Learning Facilitators can move on to become designated as "Master Learning Facilitators" after a process that involves a review of their Module facilitation by FWI and/or the Lead Agency. Master Learning Facilitators are certified to provide "Train the Trainer" Institutes throughout the nation. For consistency, we use the words Learning Facilitator on this website and in the Module Guides, but this term can refer to either a Learning Facilitator, a Master Learning Facilitator, or even a Higher Education Learning Facilitator. Please refer the "Guidelines" tab in the Facilitator log-in menu of this website for detailed certification and implementation procedures.
